

New commanders at DDAA and DDDE

By Stacy L. Umstead, DDC Public Affairs

Defense Distribution Center welcomed two new commanders to its facilities in Anniston, Ala. and Germersheim, Germany.

United States Army Lt. Col. Craig M. King assumed command of Defense Distribution Depot Anniston, Ala., or DDAA, in 2008. King, a native of Wilson, N.Y., was commissioned as an armor officer in 1991 then later transferred to Quartermaster Corps. King holds a bachelor's degree in history from the State University of New York and a master's degree in history from the University of Scranton, Pa.

Prior to assuming command of DDAA, King served in Germany as the Joint Multinational Training Center's logistics officer.

Assuming command of Defense Distribution Depot Europe, or DDDE, Germersheim, Germany in 2008, was Lt. Col. Steven J. Keller. Keller entered the military after graduation from Oakridge Military Academy, N.C. in 1982. He began his career enlisting as a military police officer and attending basic and advanced individual training at Fort McClellan, Ala. His first assignment was at Fort Lee, Va

In 1989, Keller earned his bachelor's degree in Aeronautical Studies - Management from Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University, Daytona Beach, Fla.

Before reporting as commander, DDDE, Keller was assigned to the Battle Command Training Program, Fort Leavenworth, Kan. where he served as a sustainment warfighting function chief with Operations Group Sierra.

Lt. Col. Craig M. King, commander, Defense Distribution Depot Anniston, Ala.

Lt. Col. Steven J. Keller, commander, Defense Distribution Depot Europe, Germersheim, Germany.