

Training prepares reservists for deployment

By Jose Abreu, DDC Reserve Mobilization Office

Training people to be Defense Logistics Agency Contingency Support Team, or DCST, personnel is essential to mission success.

The Defense Distribution Center Reserve and Mobilization Office assembled a comprehensive pre-deployment training package to give participants an overview of their pending assignment and the opportunity to practice the skills they will use while deployed.

“I believe it is most important to assure that these reservists, some who have never worked full-time in logistics, receive the most beneficial training to help them better understand the process and the environment they are about to endure,” said Navy Store Keeper 2nd Class Donnie Thompson. “I believe this training better prepares them and puts their minds at ease by just knowing the type of job they will be doing downrange.”

Thompson, the instructor of the newly created DDC DCST pre-deployment training, is a veteran of two tours to Iraq, where he served as a DCST member. During his first tour he served as the contracting officer representative for hazardous waste and during his second tour he served as the DLA customer support representative for the U.S. Army’s 4th Infantry Division.

DLA Contingency Support Teams are DLA personnel who are embedded with the war fighter. Their mission is to provide wholesale logistical support for all U.S. and Coalition forces in the region.

Store Keeper Chiefs Carl Anderson and Kurt Parent and Store Keeper 1st Class Ted Stradford recently attended the course. The three Naval reservists will soon be deployed to support to Iraq or Kuwait to support war fighters in the region and the training helped prepare them.

The training introduced the trio to DLA and the Defense Distribution Center, provided an overview of Army Logistics, including the requisition order number and document order number process, a look at live requests for damaged or inoperable vehicle in Iraq and Afghanistan, and a refresher on the supply tools used in theater to expedite and track critical high priority requisitions to the war fighter. Effectively managing the reports about damaged vehicles is important because quicker the parts are delivered to the customer, the sooner those vehicles can get back into the fight.

“It was great to learn about what to expect getting into theater and how to prepare for pre-deployment and deployment,” Parent said.

Anderson, Parent and Stradford also got to meet the staff of the DDC Reserve and Mobilization Office—the people they will contact if they have any concerns or issues while they are deployed. Stradford was especially appreciative of that support.

“This will certainly assist and arm personnel headed down range,” he said. “The overall (training) was very good and most helpful.”

Thompson is a DDC Reservist with the A106 Detachment, the DDC’s dedicated reserve unit, and is on his third activation which began in October 2006. This time he will serve his entire activation with the DDC headquarters training activated reservists. In addition to preparing personnel for deployment, he coordinates workloads with various distribution centers and plans annual training and inactive duty training for DDC’s 181 reservists. He also maintains contact with those reservists who are deployed.

Anyone interested in participating in a contingency mission can contact the Defense Distribution Center Reserve and Mobilization Office at 717-770-6166 or by e-mail at DDC.Mobilization@dla.mil. Committed and enthusiastic civilians, reservists or active duty military will be well trained and ready to deploy around the world.

Reservists commended by DDRV for support

Navy reservists from Defense Distribution Center Reserve Unit Detachment A-106 out of New Cumberland, Pa., recently assisted Defense Distribution Depot Richmond, Va., with A-76 preparation efforts.

The group of reservists helped to relocate tens of thousands of items, including hazardous material, closer to shipping areas so it could be issued more rapidly.

They also sorted and labeled stock so it could be placed on the shelf and ready for issue to the war fighter.

“They finished a job in two weeks that would otherwise take months to complete,” said DDRV Site Manager Steve Thien.

Thien was also impressed with the crew’s expertise and efficiency. “They were so capable and skilled – as if they had been working here for years.”

The reservists from A-106 are no strangers to distribution operations. Their drills are typically held at Defense Distribution Depot Susquehanna, Pa., in New Cumberland, Pa., the largest distribution center in the Department of Defense.

“They were really a great group and made a significant contribution to our efforts to prepare for the A-76 decision,” praised DDRV Director Jerri Taylor.
